The Mountain Lakes Preservation Area features old growth forests, wooded boulder fields, rich wetlands, open fields, lakes and rocky streams. Part of the extensive landholdings of William Penn in the 17th century, portions of it were later owned by the family of Richard Stockton and by John Witherspoon, two signers of the Declaration of Independence. In the 19th century, and until the advent of mechanical refrigeration, a group of man-made lakes were the center of an ice farming operation.

The terrain is dotted with diabase boulders, created by a volcanic intrusion that also formed the Princeton Ridge and Sourland Mountains. The flatter rocks are red shale, which underlies all of the Hopewell Valley. The forests include diverse trees and understory plants, including maples, oaks, hickories, elms and black walnut, as well as wild raspberries, spicebush, witch hazel and poison ivy.

Each spring, the area comes alive with a chorus of spring peepers and the blooms of flowering dogwood, yellow trout lily and spring beauty, as well as skunk cabbage and Jack-in-the-pulpit. Through the seasons, many more plants and wildlife appear. Look for wild mints, milkweeds, cardinal flower and goldenrods; as well as great blue herons, kingfishers, six species of woodpeckers, bluebirds and basking Eastern painted turtles. The Mountain Lakes Preservation Area offers extensive beauty, hiking trails and places for quiet contemplation.

Friends of Princeton Open Space

Founded in 1969 to preserve open space and natural areas in the face of rapid development, Friends of Princeton Open Space (FOPOS) is a non-profit organization that has helped to establish over 1,000 acres of parkland and a network of interconnecting trails in the Princeton area. Through the contributions of hundreds of people in the community, as well as grants from government and private foundations, FOPOS has contributed over $3.6 million for the purchase of land and the acquisition of conservation easements on properties that might otherwise have been developed. The properties shown in the accompanying map, as well as the lands of the Institute for Advanced Study, Turning Basin Park, Greenway Meadows Park, portions of Woodfield Reservation, and the Ricciardi and All Saints tracts are among the properties in Princeton preserved with the assistance of FOPOS.

FOPOS is also a leader in land stewardship, from creating and maintaining hiking trails (including boardwalks and footbridges), to removal of invasive species and replanting of native varieties. Under the leadership of its natural resources managers, FOPOS sponsors nature walks and workshops on native plants that are free and open to the public. It also works with schools and other local organizations to support environmental education and local clean-up projects.*

* The Billy Johnson Mountain Lakes Preserve, Mountain Lakes North and John Witherspoon Woods are maintained largely by FOPOS. Pettoranello Gardens is maintained by the Princeton/Pettoranello Foundation.
